For example, depositing £10 with a 200% deposit bonus will reward you with £20 in free bets.

Like so many of my fellow WAHNS readers, I recently changed careers and found myself in need of part-time work I could do from home. After a little research, I figured that with my administrative experience and fast typing skills, my best bet would be some form of typing for pay. As many of you in the same boat have discovered, legitimate typing and data-entry jobs of the non-scam-you-into-bankruptcy variety are almost non-existent, which is probably why the question "how can I find a typing from home job?" is one of Eddy's top pet peeves. However, there is one loophole in the Give Up Your Pipedream of Typing for Pay rule: transcription.

SpeechInk posts transcription jobs frequently on mTurk. Their basic style guide is available here, which also links to a more exhaustive industry style guide here.

4. Create a free account on mTurk and start transcribing for pay.

Tips For Success

Complete one HIT for an unfamiliar requester and wait to be paid before accepting more HITs from that source. Requesters can reject your HIT and refuse to pay for it without much consequence from Amazon, even after you complete the HIT. This is one major drawback of mTurk. Most reputable requesters don't do this—they want quality workers to take their HITs—but a rejected HIT can prevent you from getting future jobs in addition to ripping you off, so exercise caution.

Review the Turker Nation message board, especially the Requesters Hall of Fame /Shame, if you have any doubt about a requester. This site is the official user forum Amazon has set up for mTurk workers (turkers), and has a rating system in place so turkers can rate requesters as "thumbs-up" or "thumbs-down" and describe their experiences. As with all message boards, some commen
